Coronavirus and Universal Credit

Universal Credit is one of the biggest changes ever made to the benefits system. But while it may be working for many, there is a significant number of people who are having problems.

Since the outbreak of coronavirus (Covid-19), nearly 1 million people made Universal Credit claims in the last two weeks of March alone and currently there are over 5 million claimants.

It is now more important than ever that the benefits system - including Universal Credit - provides enough to live on and that people are paid quickly and efficiently.

Digital by default

Case Study

Client has recently had a stroke and his wife has oon eye's gift. They have no access to the internet so had to make a claim for Universal Credit by telephone. They received an advanced payment out have not received a notification letter to say if their application was successful.

How we helped

We took action to verify that the payments were correct, that the client was being paid their right entitlement to benefits. We empower ead the client to understand how Universal Credit payments are processed.

Case Study

The glient has made a telephone claim for Universal Credit because of his Jim Led digital skills he coulon't do an online application. The client has struggled getting through to make his claim due to high volume of calls.

How we helped

The dient struggled paying for food having to rely on food banks. He was late paying his rent and urility bills which meant he was in deot. We assisted the client to navigate out of this situation.

When applications for Universal Credit are refused

Case Study

Client is a EU-National and worked from 2016-2020 out his employer never registered his employment with HMRC. Universal Credit manufactory reconsideration failed because the DWP said he had not worked, so unable to claim as he has lost his worked as he had wage silos.

How we helped

We provided employment advice on raising a grievance. Advised he sent copies of his wage slips to HMRC and helpec him out an appeal together for Universal Credit.

Case Study

Client is a EU-National that has worked in the UK since December 2019. When lockdown began he lost his job. Client's Universal Credit declined as the DWP said he failed the habitual residence test and was unable to return to his country due to travel restrictions at the time.

How we helped

We helped him with a Mandatory reconsideration that resulted in the dient retaining his working status, so able to daim Universal Credit.

Work assessment period system flawed Case Study

Client claims Universal Credit but has been turned down twice for an advanced payment because he was made recurrent the day after he submitted his Universal Credit application. The reason was the DWP included his redundancy payment in his assessment even though the payment would not be received until 3 months after being made redundant. Clien, has a partner and three children and no food.

How we helped

We are providing ongoing assistance so that the client can challenge this decision.
